Convention of States Action (COSA) engages grassroots conservatives who believe Washington will never voluntarily give up its power—so it's up to the states, through Article V of the U.S. Constitution, to restore balance. Article V empowers state legislatures to call a convention to propose constitutional amendments that impose term limits, require a balanced federal budget, and rein in federal overreach—bypassing Congress entirely.

COSA donors are motivated by a deep concern for the future of the country and a belief that lasting change requires structural constitutional reform. They are activated by urgent appeals to safeguard liberty, defend President Trump's legacy, and prevent future left-wing administrations from reversing conservative victories.
